

Ribbon cut for new Benedictine center in Easton

Members of the staff of the Benedictine Community Services and Training Center in Easton are joined by town officials and members of the Talbot County Chamber of Commerce to cut the ribbon for the centers training facility Thursday, Jan. 25.

EASTON — The Benedictine Community Services Training Center in Easton held an open house and ribbon-cutting ceremony Thursday, Jan. 25, at its center on Goldsborough Street. Center officials, along with town and Talbot County Chamber of Commerce officials, were on hand for the 5 p.m. ribbon cutting.

The center provides opportunities for people with intellectual and developmental disabilities to gain employment and meaningful life experiences in the community.

Benedictine currently provides employment services to more than 115 adults in the area.

The service has established relationships with more than 100 community employers and training partners.

The center works in partnership with the Division of Rehabilitation Services. It provides classroom training and field experiences in specific vocations.
