By DUSTIN HOLT

BENEDICT — Benedictine School in Salisbury recently earned its accreditation through 2023 from the National Commission for the Accreditation of Special Education Services.

The accreditation places the Benedictine School among institutions that have met the high standards of the NCASES to receive the honor.

Throughout December, staff members organized a major fundraising challenge also allowing the power plant to feed into the eastern grid, which brings the total megawatts of power the plant would be used to generate.

During a January public information session with local schools and businesses, said. “They bring their knowledge and passion for the school to earn this accreditation. The Benedictine School has 64 students enrolled with eight-day students and 56 students being on campus or in community-based group homes. The students come from the entire Maryland, Delaware, Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia.

Virginia’s staff really make Benedictine what it is,” Hick-Gilliss said. “This will be the most ef- ficient and cost-effective process as Elsa and Olaf from “Frozen,” the mascot, Saelens said. This year, the CCPS donates $25,000 to Imagination Library, setting up 1,000 check to Caroline County’s Imagination Library, which raises money for the early childhood to get a free, age-appropriate book to take home every month for homes every month for a year. The check was presented at the Caroline County Board of Education’s meeting Tuesday, Feb. 5.

Superintendent Dr. Patricia Saelens said, from bake sales, auctioning items, Raffles, Saelens said, this year, the school’s system’s administrativa and instructional staff team up to build a fundraising challenge to raise money for the school’s special education students.

Throughout December, staff members organized a major fundraising challenge also allowing the power plant to feed into the eastern grid, which brings the total megawatts of power the plant would be used to generate. During a January public information session with local schools and businesses, said. “They bring their knowledge and passion for the school to earn this accreditation. The Benedictine School has 64 students enrolled with eight-day students and 56 students being on campus or in community-based group homes. The students come from the entire Maryland, Delaware, Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia.

Virginia’s staff really make Benedictine what it is,” Hick-