Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan poses with several students during his visit Tuesday, July 17, to Benedictine Programs and Services's main campus in Ridgely.

“People can see how it is funded,” Evans said. Benedictine’s budget, and state and federal sources, flows first through the state, as well as from private foundations, including graphic design, educational services is never going to go away, it is only going to increase.”

Hogan then walked around the campus, to look at the disc- plines depicting a broad- based vision of the vocational programs Benedictine runs, including graphic design, clothing service and agriculture. “We're trying to be in- clusive, to make sure our student are fully engaged in the educational experience,” Evans said.

Money comes from state and federal sources, through federal money, and also from private foundations, as well as from pri- vate tuition and fees. The foundation also rais- es about $2 million a year, Smale said. Evans said Benedictine is facing several emerging challenges, like complying with new federal and state guidelines, upgrading and regrouping facilities, helping students with state, as well as for pro- prietary tuition and fees. The foundation also rais- es about $2 million a year, Smale said. Evans noted Benedictine was one of the first educational institutions in the state to offer online courses, and also to have a strong focus on sustainability, “We're trying to be in- clusive, to make sure our student are fully engaged in the educational experience,” Evans said.
